

Hey ya'll :)

Still got a bit of the south in me hahaha

Well, even though I fell flat on my face, the trip wasn't too bad. For those of you that may not have heard yet, I had a fall in Omaha while walking Hunter and indeed fell flat onto my face and that trip wasn't all that good. The trip to Perry to help after Hurricane Idalia was quite the adventure and wasn't too bad. Although it didn't go as planned, I learned a lot about myself and grew a great deal. I believe it was needed to prepare me for what's coming as I embark on the next journey.

The trip home was good as I was able to reflect on the journey and found that I indeed am to be helping others. It just may not look like I thought it would. I realized I am to use all my gifts and talents to help others not just my handy man skills. The realization I had along with this was 'I am who I am because of I am, it's not about what I do, it's about who I am.

Truck issues: Oh my, I thought it was over but its not. I got home on April 6th and took the truck to the dealer that I bought it from on April 9th with the concern of some issues that still needed to be resolved. It's still there 6 weeks later as there seems to be one thing after another. I have addressed this with the dealership, and we are in the beginning stages of getting me out of that truck. At least I'm not totally stranded here as they have me using one of their courtesy vehicles, a black Ford Edge with courtesy car stickers on the doors. It has worked great to meet up with people as I have continued to sell things and have emptied out my storage locker. It's a rather recognizable vehicle :)

I am looking forward to getting the truck issue resolved and moving on to the next mission/adventure. What I'm seeing right now is leaving here and heading to Oregon to visit my grandson, then head to CO to spread some of my friend Larry's ashes, after that to Omaha to the scene of the fall on my face. Along the journey if I am presented with natural disasters my plan will be to see if I can be of assistance as well as spreading the Love, Hope, Peace, and Faith of Jesus.

Thank you all for the prayers, support, encouragement, and being such a great sounding board this past year in making this new chapter in my life possible. I do have a big ask and am hoping that some if not all will be able to help again this year as the Living Well gets rolling towards the open road and helping others
